Tropical Cyclones are some of the most powerful natural events that take place on our planet... with powerful winds, torrential rain, and a number of unusual weather phenomena. They form over oceans, and can happen anywhere in the world when the right conditions develop... but it's when they occur in the Atlantic Ocean or the northeastern Pacific that they become known as Hurricanes when they reach a certain intensity. These storms have battered the islands in their path and the coastline of the Americas for as long as records have been kept. Join us for today's video, as we take a look at the 15 most powerful hurricanes in history!

15 LARGEST Hurricanes and Cyclones Ever Recorded

121K views 1 year ago #hurricane #top15 #cyclone

Tropical cyclones are the most powerful weather events that take place on the planet, with winds that can reach as much as 200 miles, or 322 kilometers per hour, but while this intensity affects how much damage and destruction one will cause, there's another factor that needs to be taken into account too... their overall size. One of the smallest ever recorded, for example, was Cyclone Tracy in 1974 that was just 60 miles, or 100 kilometers across when it made landfall... and this gave a relatively narrow field of effect. Others, though, have been gigantic. It's time to run for shelter as we see...

Freak in Baco at Fort Jackson when Matthew hit in '16. Was the first landfall I'd ever experienced and it was surreal to say the least.

Great video! Hurricanes/Typhoons are so fascinating, as is most weather. Having grown up in Florida, I've been through a so many. People are lead to believe that wind is the most dangerous part of them, but really it's the water. Surge, floods, and so much more. The wind can cause devastation, but not as much as water. Funny story, I have no baby photos or an original birth certificate because of Hurricane Andrew Nane.

You missed the pink cloud or cloud cap, which is shown in the number one entry, the supercol. These form when a cumulus builds so high and fast that it pushes up into the stratosphere.

I live very close to the Skokholm River and I had no idea that the salmon run was such a rare sight. It doesn't happen to that degree every year but I've seen it quite a few times.

I remember when a microburst happened one day. It was a bright sunny day, then turned dark rapidly and unexpectedly. The microburst lasted only 5 minutes, left as quickly as it showed up, and was quite intense. It was like a horseshoe in miniature, and fast forward.
- @AndrewsVikendOfficial · 2 weeks ago
I've had the pleasure to experience a few of these. The microburst was a scary thing, since I first thought that it was a tornado. It was pretty mild, only taking down a couple of trees in the back where I was at the time...but it was still a "scary" moment for me.
